

Message from the President

This past year, I had the opportunity to meet up with many of our members at various events. Many of you have given me very good, valuable feedback and encouragement as to where ACCE is heading and that ACCE is being recognized as the leading Chinese business association in the main stream. This was truly reflected in our activities throughout the year, such as participating in the two Small Business Forums organized by Enterprise Toronto and Markham Small Business Enterprise Centre respectively during the Small Business Week in Ontario; working with many Chinese community organizations and the international foreign trade office of Korea (the Kotra); and participating at numerous networking sessions, seminars, trade missions, and charity fundraising events.

At the ACCE Annual General Meeting in September this year, I was re-elected as the President of the Association along with many new directors. I am very confident that the new board of directors with their actions and commitment will bring ACCE to another level of achievement.

On October 26, 2009 ACCE launched the Nomination Drive for the Chinese Canadian Entrepreneur Awards 2010 by holding a media conference at the Ontario Investment and Trade Centre. The event has been very successful and we are very pleased with the continuing support from our sponsors given the current economy. This year, we have established a new award, the "Best Asia Pacific Business" Award, as sponsored by the Hong Kong Economic & Trade Office. This award is to recognize companies that use Hong Kong as a platform to reach the Asian Pacific markets.

As the nomination is now underway, we look forward to the 14th Annual Chinese Canadian Entrepreneur Awards Gala which is to be held on April 10, 2010 at the Hilton Suites Hotel, Markham. This signature event of ACCE recognizes the excellence and the achievements of Chinese entrepreneurs in the community.

In the upcoming months, we will be launching a "Welcome Kit" designed to help new immigrants who want an "all-in-one package" in which they can get the necessary information for starting a new business and other useful resources from various banks, financial institutions and government agencies.

At this wonderful time of the year, I would like to extend our sincere gratitude and appreciation to all our members, sponsors, the business community, the judging panel, the media and the government bodies. I would also like to take this opportunity to thank our dedicated directors, volunteers and staff for their hard work. A special acknowledgement of thanks goes to our General Manager, Ms. Karen Ng, who has been with us for over 10 years.

May your holidays be filled with joy and the coming year be overflowing with all the good things in life. Let us also remember those in need of our help and prayers.

Wishing you all a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year! Gong Hei Fa Choi!

Is your business getting the recession shivers?

Met with your banker lately? Now would be a good time, whether your company is in the market for a loan or not.

Your banker can be your best friend when economic times are tough. But, as in any relationship, credibility and trust are key, and that requires mutual respect, honesty and staying in touch.

"Contact your banker often and keep them posted on what's happening with your company, even if you're not looking for money" says Gary Fitchett, a Toronto-based financial consultant and author of the "Financing Toolkit for Small & Medium Businesses". "Bring them into your inner circle, have them visit your operations at least once a year. Ideally, develop that relationship during good times so that you can count on the bank when times get tough."

As businesses of all sizes have discovered, tightening credit markets have made getting a loan far more onerous. If you talk to the experts though, it's not all doom and gloom. Bankers are much more receptive to loan requests from companies they have established relationships with, notes Edmée Métivier, Executive Vice President of Financing and Consulting at the Business Development Bank of Canada (BDC).

In fact, banks are quite willing to loan money to companies with solid business models. But expect more stringent due diligence and more questions from lenders.

"Banks are more cautious these days" says Métivier. "They want some degree of confidence that your company's business model will survive. They are less inclined to take shortcuts on their due diligence checks. So expect slower turnaround times."

Your business loan to-do-list

Borrowing money in a recession can make good business sense for well-managed companies that plan ahead. Fitchett and Métivier recommend a few things to consider in preparing for that critical meeting with your banker:

1. Decide what type of money you need

Is it equity, working capital or long-term money for fixed assets? Knowing what type of money you need will determine whether you approach a bank, credit union, venture capitalist or other financier.

2. Two lenders are better than one

Never leave yourself exposed to one lender. Part of your planning for the worst should be to shop around and establish additional sources of credit. If you are large enough, divide your financing between different institutions. If you are smaller, split your financing needs into shorter- and longer-term.

3. Satisfy the five "Cs" of lending

Entrepreneurs should understand what criteria a lender will be applying in its assessment. Fitchett refers to these as the "five Cs of credit".

Character: Does your management have the skills, experience and track record to deliver?

Capacity: Do you have the ability to repay the loan? Banks will be looking at both your track record and your anticipated cash flow.

Capital: Is your equity base strong?

Conditions: How are local, national and even international events affecting your business?

Collateral: Often mistaken as the most important thing a banker wants, collateral is actually lower on a banker's priority list, compared to the other "Cs".

4. Talk to your banker

As discussed earlier, don't be a stranger; keep the lines of communications open. This includes meeting all of your company's reporting requirements on a timely basis.

"Sending your financial statements and other reports late to your banker leaves a very bad impression" warns Fitchett.

Likewise, do not exceed your approved credit limit. If your company is going to need additional money, talk to your banker in advance to inquire about getting a temporary extension.

"In other words, don't come in at 11:30 on a Friday morning and say I can't meet the payroll in half an hour. You will get a very chilly response," adds Fitchett.

And lastly, be realistic about your short- and long-term cash flow projections and share this information with your banker. This can be used as the basis for your line of credit once it's required.

5. Do your homework

When a banker asks for more data and more paperwork, don't put up a fuss. Banks are in the business of lending money, but their head offices are doing more thorough due diligence these days to ensure the money they loan is for sound business ventures.

BDC's Métivier also stresses the importance of firming up your business plan. "You'd be surprised how much time we bankers spend injecting focus and analysis into prospective clients' business cases and plans. Entrepreneurs who do their homework and produce a solid business plan are more likely to get funding."

6. Run a tight ship

This is back to basics stuff that not all companies stay on top of, focusing on activities like collecting accounts receivables, paying bills and tracking inventory. Banks will want assurances that you are taking care of such business fundamentals.

In a nutshell: prepare, well in advance. Be forthcoming – answer a banker's questions 10 times if need be and disclose problems earlier than later. Diversify your risk. And, above all, master your business plan.
